Father of Psychology Wilhelm Wundt, MD

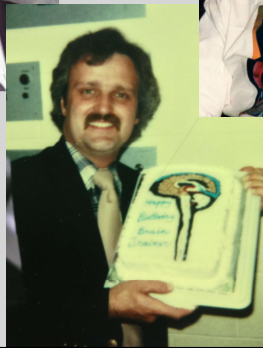

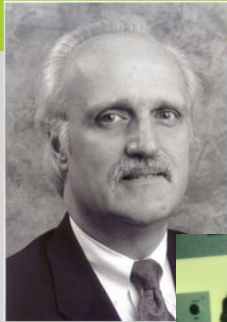

Dr. Barth is credited with introducing the neuropsychology community to the importance of studying mild traumatic brain injury and sports concussion, and the Sports as a Laboratory Assessment Model (SLAM). Importantly, he is an excellent influencer and dedicated mentor who has supported so many researchers and clinicians.

William Perry, PhD, Executive Director
National Academy of Neuropsychology

DISTINGUISHED MENTOR & BELOVED COLLEAGUE

I rarely thought of myself as a mentor but rather as a friend to my postdoctoral fellows and colleagues and I naturally tried to find a way to make our relationship and Neuropsychology fun.

MENTOR & FRIEND TO MANY

Dr. Barth is one of the most kind, humble, and brilliant scientist-clinicians of our time and one of the leading pioneers in advancing our knowledge of brain injury and recovery. His contributions to education, science, and clinical practice have also impacted scores of trainees, patients, and families, and it is an honor to call him a colleague, mentor, and friend. C. Munro Cullum, PhD, ABPP-CN, Past President & Fellow of SNS

When I think about the people who have had the most influence on my career, Dr. Barth is unquestionably at the top of the list. He modeled what it means to be a well-respected, brain injury pioneer and expert while still being a very approachable, caring, generous, and generally amazing person. I can only hope to continue that tradition in my own career and would be incredibly honored if my patients and colleagues hold me in anywhere near the same regard that I hold him. Christopher M. Bailey, PhD, ABPP-CN, President-Elect & Fellow of SNS

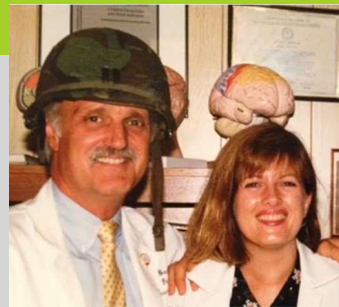

Dr. Jeffrey Barth is the renaissance man: sailor, musician, scientist, clinician, and educator. He has inspired colleagues, patients, and friends with his unwavering gentle, yet powerful, style and his steady, humble wisdom. His unmatched creative inventiveness launched the field of sport neuropsychology. He truly is a gift to our profession, and in more simple terms, a lovely human being. Rosemarie Scolaro Moser, PhD, ABPP-RP, President & Fellow, SNS

RETIREMENT

LEARN, LAUGH, BE KIND, & APPRECIATE

Jeff has been my mentor, my colleague, my friend, and my family. One of the important things I learned from Jeff is that you can not only retain your humanity in this profession, but you can be kind, gracious, and keep your sense of humor.

Academic medicine may be a serious endeavor, but the best medicine is a sense of humor and appreciating your family, friends, and colleagues – and always providing compassionate care to those who need it most. DKB
